- In 1950, for planning towards social justice, India came out with an institution called planning commission but it was affected by problem of conflict with Finance Commission, over monetary power, no constitutional and executive backing and high discrimination among the states. Even different plans reflected different ideologies of government without any homogenous aims and vision.
- Therefore, after 2014, the government came out with a new organization by the name NITI Aayog (National Institution of Transforming India). NITI Aayog is a nodal agency to achieve social justice because:
 - No monetary power except think tank from various fields of policy making.
 - instead of five-year plans, a medium-term plan by the name NITI Aayog@75
 - Bottom-up planning instead of up-down planning.
 - More focus on cooperative to competitive federalism to make states independent.

NITI Aayog over time came out with various federal reports like in education, health, sustainable development report to further enhance competitive federalism and region-specific policy.

NITI Aayog with the help of its think tank for the first time independently talked about the measures like:

- Atal innovation Mission by linking industry with academia
- Monetization of national assets to utilize this money for infrastructure development through infrastructure pipeline network.
- Regional planning
- Aspirational districts
- Inclusion of new technologies like Artificial intelligence and drones.
- Therefore, NITI Aayog is working to make India a country under the fourth stage of Rostow's growth model without compromising with the principles of
